Historic Royal Palaces HAMPTON COURT PALACE

Henry VIII and Hampton Court Palace are closely linked both in history and the popular imagination. Of Henry's great Tudor palace, half survives. The rest was rebuilt by William III as a stunning baroque palace. We use Henry's royal coat of arms, which is supported by the Tudor symbols of the red dragon of Wales and a greyhound.

Henry's Chapel Royal at the palace boasts a flamboyant vaulted ceiling with gold stars set against a blue ground, and this inspires the Hampton Court Palace pattern.

Historic Royal Palaces receives no funding from the Government or the Crown, so we depend on the support of our visitors, members, donors, volunteers and sponsors.

History lives! Buy plants propagated from the oldest grape vine in the world

The Great Vine at Hampton Court Palace was planted around 1768 by the famous 18th century gardener Lancelot 'Capability' Brown. Considered the oldest grape vine in the world, the plant still produces abundant bunches of sweet black grapes in late summer.

In the spring, this deciduous plant produces bright green leaves and is best grown in a sheltered south facing sunny position, or in a glasshouse or conservatory.
